The new president, C. William Bevins, AIA, of Charleston, W.Va., is an owner/vice president of ZMM Inc., a Charleston-based architecture and engineering firm.

Bevins has been instrumental in the development of the computerized examination that is administered to architecture licensure candidates throughout the U.S. and Canada, noted an NCARB release. He is also leading the organization's efforts to negotiate agreements with a number of nations through which qualified U.S. and foreign architects may practice in each other's country and will continue NCARB's outreach with the groups' regulatory counterparts worldwide. Bevins is a graduate of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University.

In addition, during the Seattle conference, NCARB awarded its Presidential health, safety, and welfare through their service to NCARB and to the practice of architecture." AIA-member recipients include Alan W.T. Baldwin Jr., AIA (as previously reported in AIArchitect) and Michiel M. Bourdrez, AIA, NCARB's director of professional services. The other awardees are Pamela J. Hill, an architect and educator from Bozeman, Mont., honored for her work to strengthen the link between education and practice; Petr Bilek, current president of the Czech Chamber of Architects, who was recognized for his long-term service to his country's architecture community and his efforts to establish professional ties with U.S. architects; Stephen Sands, cited for his service to the California Board of Architects; and Mary de Sousa, NCARB's controller, noted for her management of NCARB's finances.
